A wide range of so-called climate technologies is rapidly emerging in Minnesota, but implementation in rural areas is often done without community input or knowledge. In our pilot project, we researched several of these technologies and their potential impacts on environmental justice communities in Minnesota.

Come learn about the tools we developed in our pilot project. We hope these tools will give communities more information and start conversations about a just energy transition in the face of climate change.

This webinar is intended for partner agencies who work in community engagement and organizing and/or environmental justice.
